

Pregnancy Pants by Laura Lapham

NARRATOR, female voice excited and with a sales pitch style voice.

Setting: A crowded bar. We watch as a woman wearing a dress gets hit on by a couple of douchey dudes.

NARRATOR

Do you like going out with friends?

But hate getting hit on and harassed by random dudes at the bar.

The makers of Spanx are proud to present Pregnancy Pants, the lightweight high-waisted underwear that mimics a baby bump at the push of a button.

(The woman then begins to press a button in her hand that connects to the Pregnancy Pants under her dress. As she does this a small baby bump begins to appear.)

Simply grab the pump and press to activate. The magic belly will fill with air and presto! You're alone!

(The woman, now with a full baby bump, places one hand on the small of her back for support and the other on her "belly". The men that once swarmed around her immediately leave.)

Now you can saddle up to the bar and enjoy your beer in peace.

Pregnancy Pants work in all occasions.

Riding the bus.

(A man giving up his seat for a "pregnant" woman.)

Cutting the line at grocery store.

(People in line move aside for a "pregnant" woman.)

And even copping a wheelchair at the airport.

(A "pregnant" woman rolls through the airport in a wheelchair, with sunglasses on like a boss.)

And for more complicated situations, try Pregnancy Water Pants. With a built-in water pouch, you'll be able to catch a free cab, skip out on a bill, or leave an awkward conversation simply by "breaking your water".

It's that simple!

Call in the next 10 and we'll throw in a second pair of Pregnancy Pants for free.
